ESSENTIALS TO CREATE REAL INNS

Many a time, your players will stumble across an inn or a restaurant and they will try to order something. But you didn't prepare a menu so it's just... I don't know, I guess meat. And... and ale. Yeah. Or maybe your players want to watch the customers. Who are they?

Erh... I don't know, like four people? Or maybe they want to know that barmaid's name. But it's Anne. Again. To avoid breaking the immersion of your players, here are some essentials to create real inns, restaurants etc.

Included in this homebrewery:

- Innkeeper & Restaurant owner names
- Inn & restaurant names
- Staff names

CUSTOMER TYPES

Four people sitting around on a table playing cards. An old man and a young girl flirting. Three friends shouting funny stories. One person scribblin stuff on a paper, maybe drawing. A couple enjoying their food. A party of around ten people sitting on a table celebrating a marriage. A drunkard sitting at the bar trying to drink from his empty bottle. A person reading a book while seeping on some ale. Three armoured people discussing around a map. A slightly or heavily wounded person trying to eat. An old man smoking and just looking around, alone. A poor fellow reading a letter again and again looking distressed. Three orcs bullying the innkeeper. Five peasants cursing the mayor.

MENUS & PRICES

I added simple names for the inns and restaurants just in case you want to print the menus. The four inn classes are in the following order: Poor Inn, Regular Inn, Expensive Restaurant, Luxurious Restaurant. These are located in the following pages.

FINAL WORD

Of course you can add or remove anything you want. This "guide" was supposed to be simply menus but I decided to add some things to it, minor details (like names) that can really make your inn unique. Just imagine the look on your smartass rogue's face when they ironically ask "Well.. is there a menu to choose from?" and you hand them over one.
