INTRODUCTION

Welcome to what I hope is the first release of many for Beyond the Horizon.

The Modular Character Models were conceived one day when I visited my daughter's kindergarten, where I came across some classic paper dress up dolls. And suddenly it clicked for me: "I've been wanting something like that for ages, for my games - I can't draw very well, and while I can describe my character, a picture is worth 1,000 words".

In steps Rodney (the person kind enough to do the layout on this very PDF), and he suggested that I contact Red, the artist who was kind enough to accept a commission to draw these.

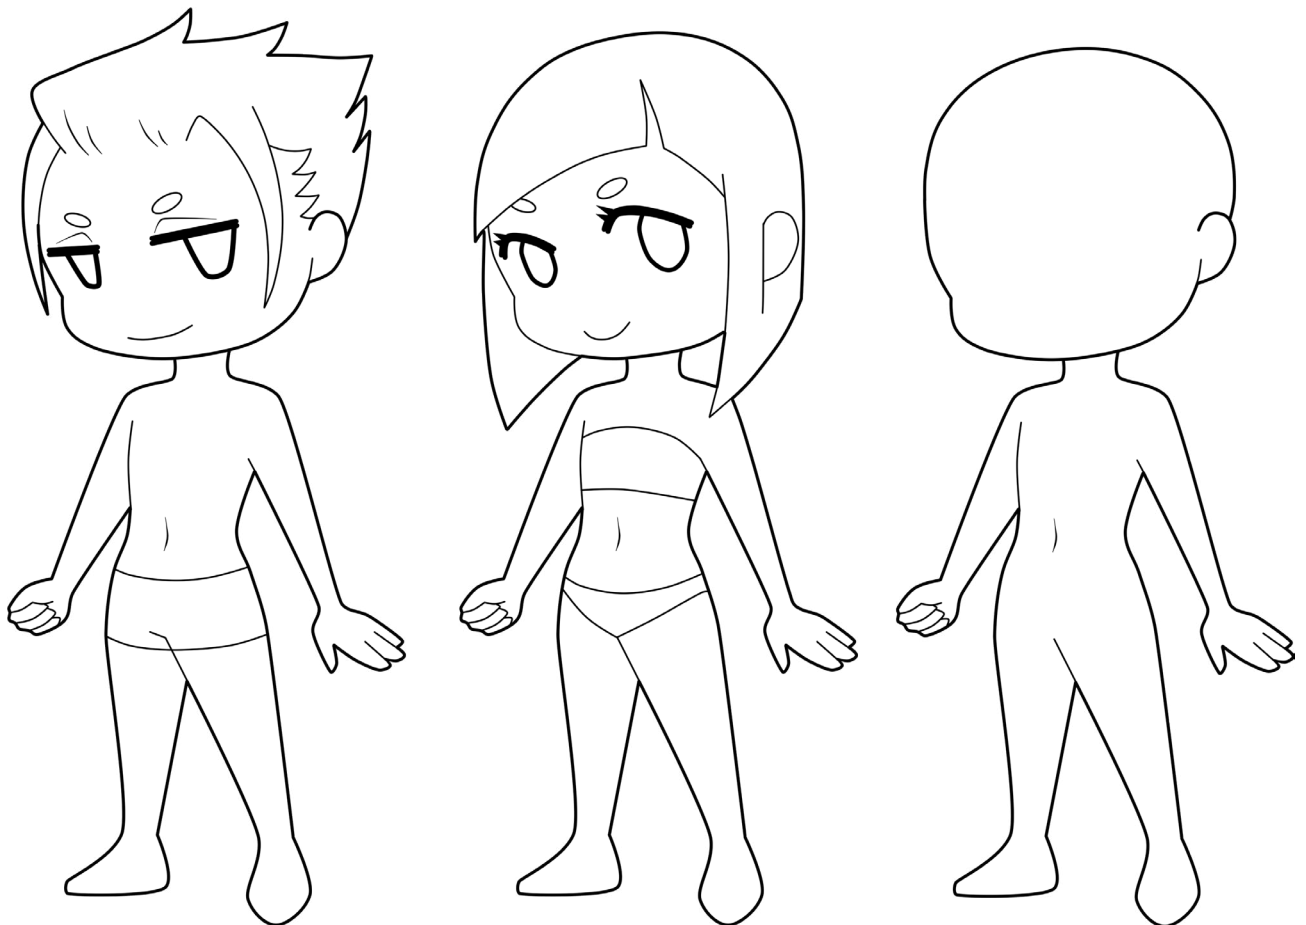

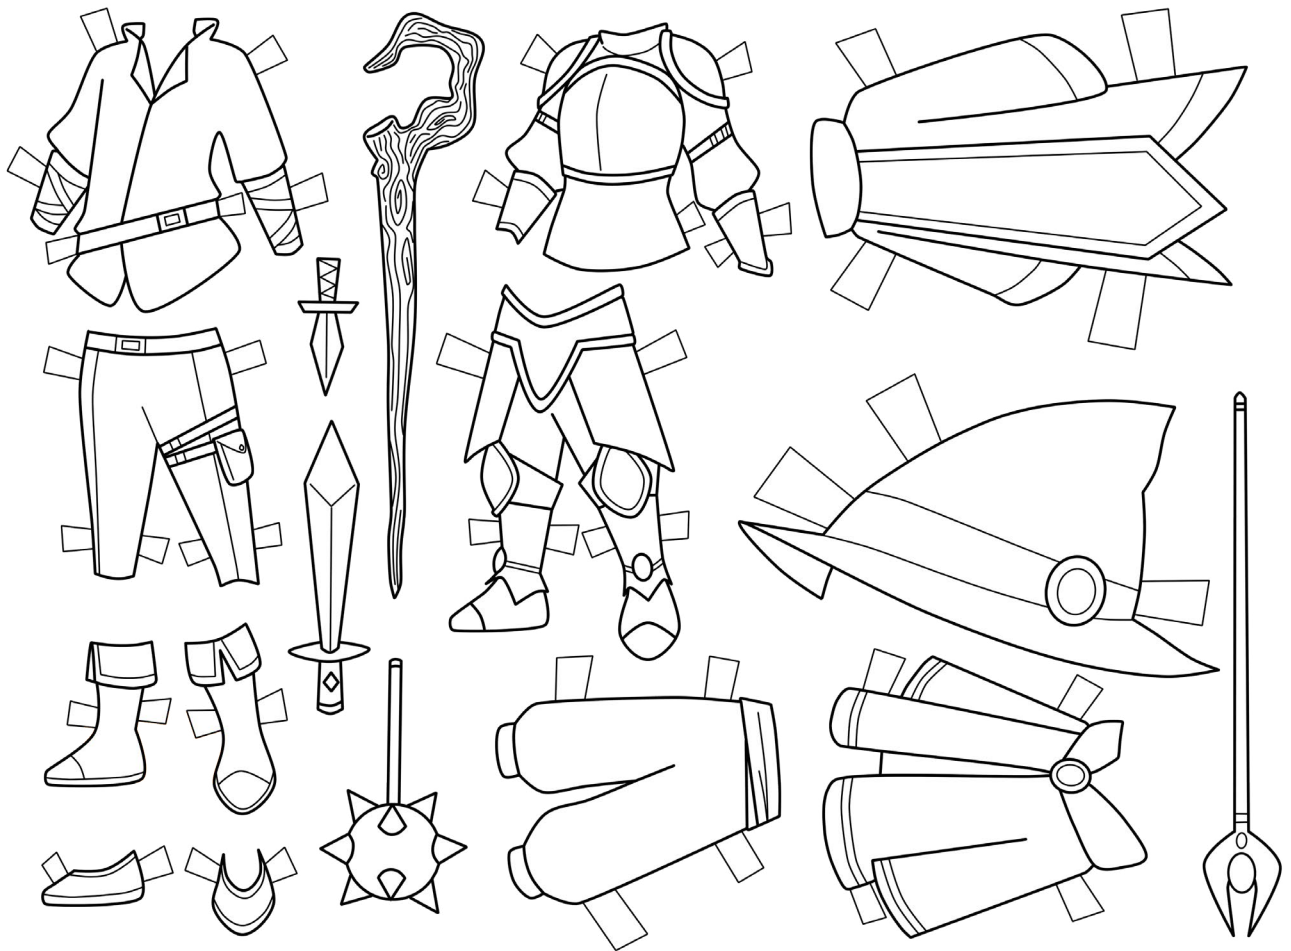

I wanted a style that was simple, black and white line art only, but distinctive enough that with minor changes to each character, your character could stand out, whether that meant adding extra details or even just simple coloring in.

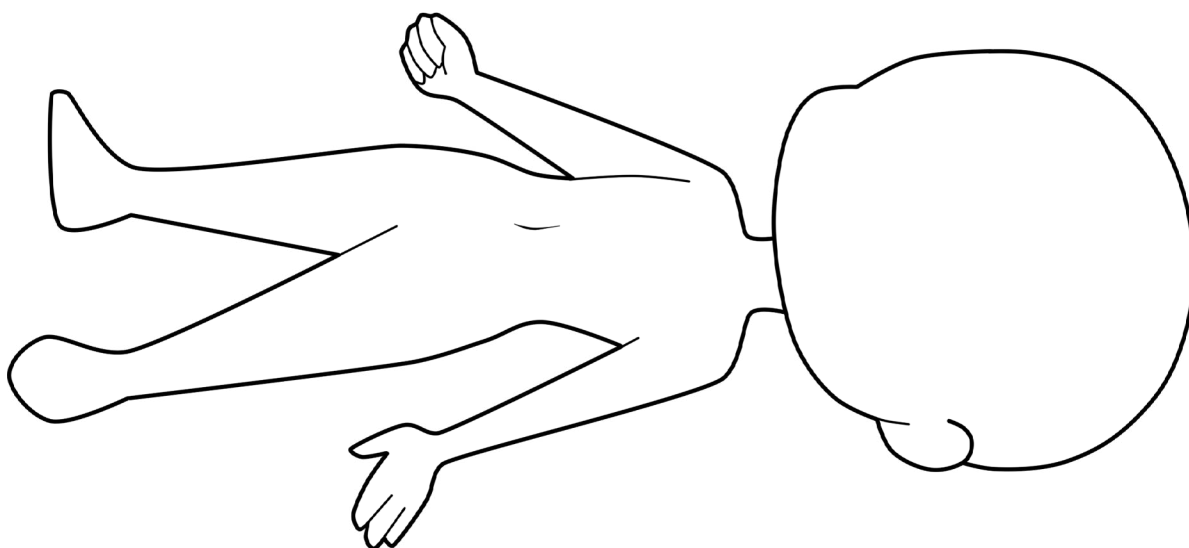

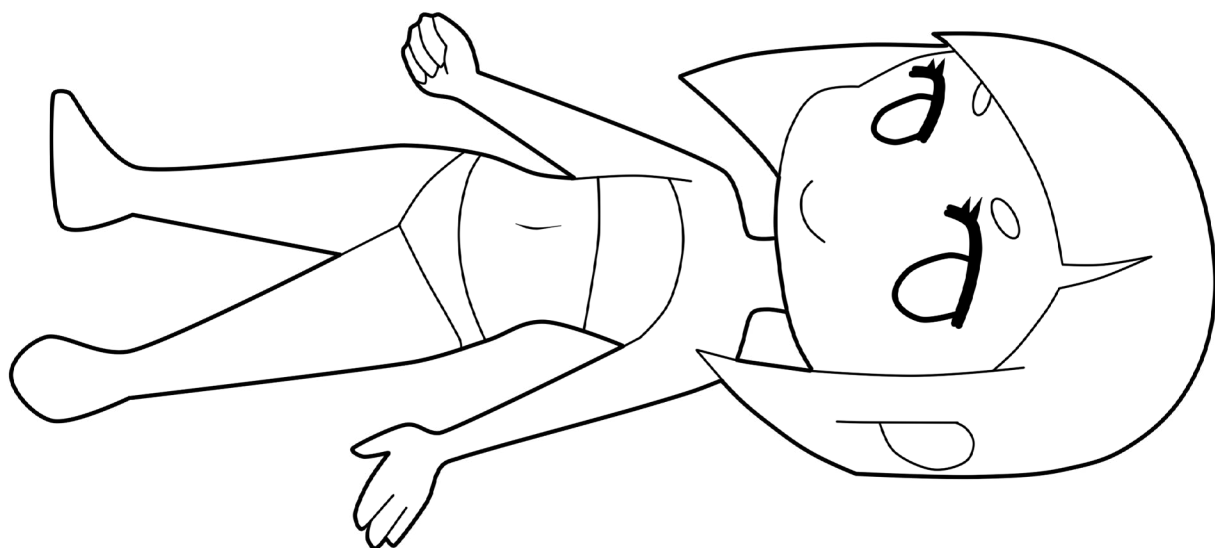

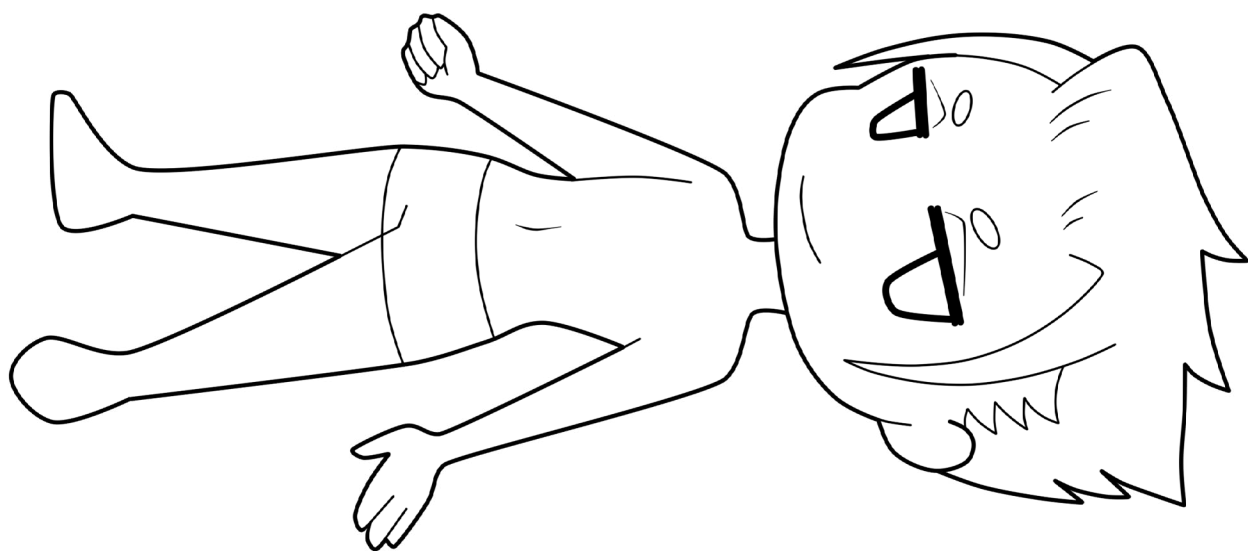

And incidentally, in that process, we created something that my daughter loves (in fact, she stole my very first copy of it), but here we are.

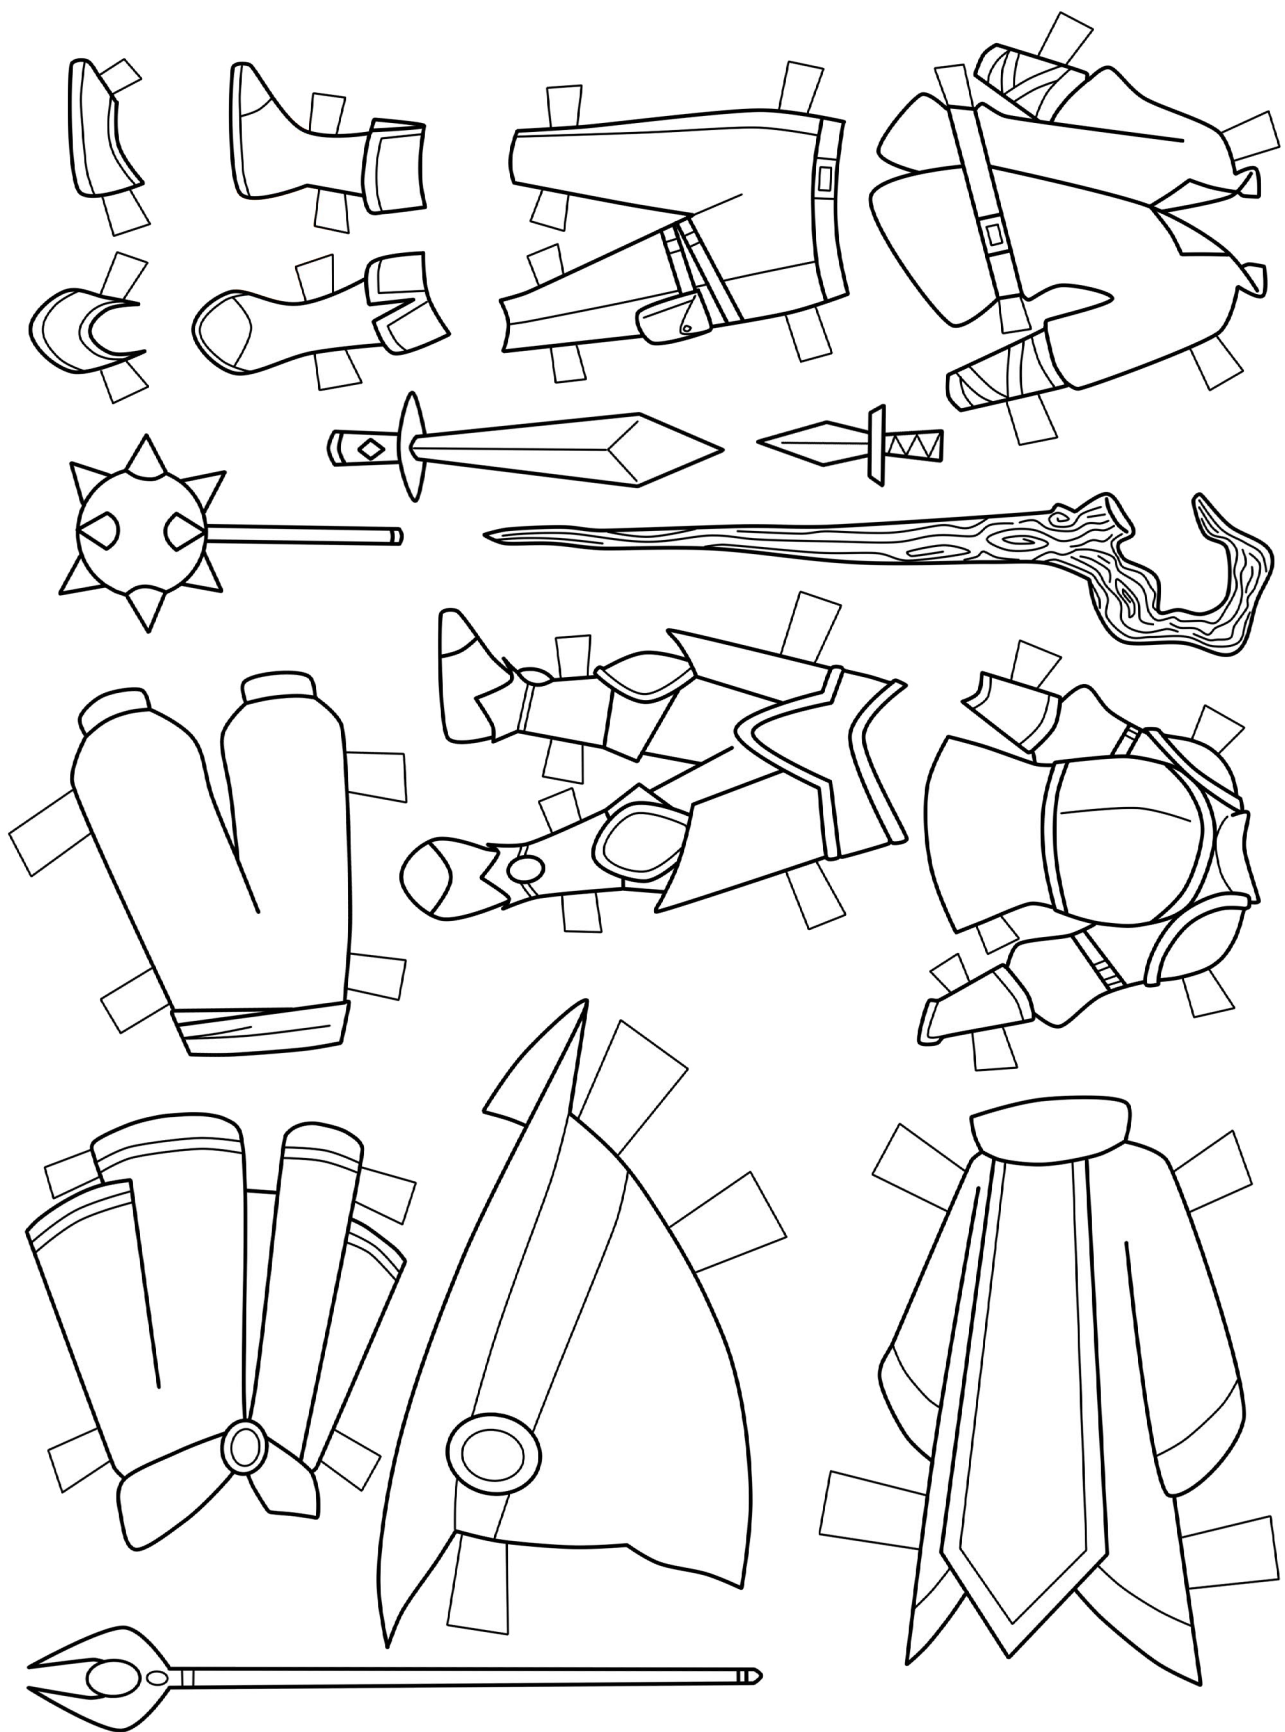

I hope everyone enjoys this, slightly odd, little offering. May it bring hours of entertainment to your gaming table.

Best regards,
Kim Frandsen

Rising Phoenix Games

FIGMENT FACTORY

Ever sit in a gaming session and find that other players didn't quite get the description of your character?

Did you ever have an image in mind that you just couldn't get across in words or in drawings?

Perhaps you have children, and you'd like to introduce them to roleplaying, but they're finding it hard to visualise their characters?

This is where Character Models come in. Three "chibi" style models are provided (one masculine, one feminine, and one with a blank face for you to draw your own) along with a bunch of clothing for popular classes, so that you can attach and customise the clothing to your desire, and make your character your own. The clothes for the 4 fantasy character tropes are for a knight (or fighter), rogue, priest, and a mage.
