Circle of Sin

A One-Round D&D LIVING GREYHAWK® Core Adventure

Version 1

By Stuart Kerrigan
Circle Reviewer: Creighton Broadhurst

Something is wrong in the Free City of Greyhawk. Tensions in the River Quarter have begun to rise as what was good has become evil, a demented dying man screams something about iniquity being your downfall and a zealot is one step ahead of you everywhere you turn. The bonds that kept an old and terrible evil in check are being loosened by an insane circle of malcontents in this scenario for levels 1 to 12.

Based on the original DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® rules created by E. Gary Gygax and Dave Arneson and the new DUNGEONS & DRAGONS game designed by Jonathan Tweet, Monte Cook, Skip Williams, Richard Baker, and Peter Adkison.

This is an RPGA® Network scenario for the Dungeons & Dragons® game. A four-hour time block has been allocated for each round of this scenario, but the actual playing time will be closer to three hours. The rest of the time is spent in preparation before game play, and scoring after the game. The following guidelines are here to help you with both the preparation and voting segment of the game. Read this page carefully so that you know and can communicate to your players the special aspects of playing an RPGA scenario.

Preparation

First you should print this scenario. This scenario was created to support double-sided printing, but printing it single sided will work as well. There is enough room along the inside margin to bind the adventure, if you desire.

Read this entire adventure at least once before you run your game. Be sure to familiarize yourself with any special rules, spells, or equipment presented in the adventure. It may help to highlight particularly important passages.

When you run an RPGA D&D adventure we assume that you have access to the following books: the Player's Handbook, the Dungeon Master's Guide, and the Monster Manual. We also assume that you have a set of dice (at least one d4, d6, d8, d10, d12, and d20), some scrap paper, a pencil, an RPGA scoring packet, and your sense of fun. It is also a good idea to have a way to track movement during combat. This can be as simple as a pad of graph paper and a pencil, as handy as a vinyl grid map and chits, or as elaborate as resin dungeon walls and miniatures.

Instruct the players either to prepare their characters now, or wait until you read the introduction, depending on the requirements of the scenario as described in the introduction.

Keep in mind that you must have at least three players (not counting the DM), for the game session to be a sanctioned RPGA event. As well, you cannot have more than six players participating in the game.

Once you are ready to play, it is handy to instruct each player to place a nametag in front of him or her. The tag should have the player's name at the bottom, and the character's name, race, and gender at the top. This makes it easier for the players (and the DM) to keep track of who is playing which character.

The players are free to use the game rules to learn about equipment and weapons their characters are carrying. That said, you as the DM can bar the use of even core rulebooks during certain times of play. For example, the players are not free to consult the Dungeon Master's Guide when confronted with a trap or hazard, or the Monster Manual when confronted with a monster.

Some of the text in this scenario is written so that you may present it as written to the players, while other text is for your eyes only. Text for the players will be in gray boxes. It's strongly recommended that you paraphrase the player text instead of reading it aloud. Some of this text is general and must be adapted to the specific situation or to actions of the player characters.

Scoring

After the players have completed the scenario or the time allotted to run the scenario has run out, the players and DM score the game. The RPGA has three ways to score its games. Consult your convention coordinator to determine which method to use for this scenario:

1. No-vote scoring: The players write their names and RPGA numbers on the scoring packet grid. You fill in the top of the grid. That is all. No one is rated. This method is used for people who are just playing for fun.
2. Partial scoring: The players rate the game master and the scenario on their player voting sheet, and provide personal information, but don't vote for other players. The game master rates the scenario and completes personal and event information, but does not rate the players as a team or vote for players. This method is used when there is no competition, but the event coordinator wants information on how the game masters are performing, or the game master wants feedback on his or her own performance.
3. Voting: Players and game masters complete the entire packet, including voting for best player. If this method is used, be sure to allow about 15-20 minutes for the players to briefly describe their characters to the other players, and about 5-10 minutes for voting. This method is used when the players want to know who played the "best" amongst the group, or when the adventure is run in tournament format with winners and prizes.

When using voting, rank the players in order of your voting choice while they are completing their forms, so that you are not influenced by their comments on your abilities. It's a good idea to have the players vote while you determine treasure and experience awards for the scenario.

After voting, give the Scoring Packet to your event coordinator.

This is a LIVING GREYHAWK Adventure. As a LIVING adventure it is expected that players bring their own characters with them. If players do not have a LIVING GREYHAWK character generated, get a copy of the current LIVING GREYHAWK character generation guidelines, and a character sheet from your convention coordinator or the RPGA Web site, and then have any players without a character create one. Once all players have a LIVING GREYHAWK character, play can begin.

Along with the other materials that you are assumed to have in order to run a D&D game, it is also recommended that you have a copy of the LIVING GREYHAWK Gazetteer.

Living Greyhawk Levels of Play

Because players bring their own characters to LIVING GREYHAWK games, this adventure's challenges are proportioned to the average character level of the PCs participating in the adventure. To determine the Average Party Level (APL):

1. Determine the character level for each of the PCs participating in the adventure.
2. If PCs bring animals that have been trained for combat (most likely being war horses, dogs trained for war), other than those brought by virtue of a class ability (i.e. animal companions, familiars, paladin's mounts, etc) use the following chart to determine the number of levels you add to the sum above. Add each character's animals separately. A single PC may only bring four or fewer animals of this type, and animals with different CRs are added separately.

CR	1	2	3	4
1/4 & 1/6	0	0	0	1
1/3 & 1/2	0	0	1	1
1	1	1	2	3
2	2	3	4	5
3	3	4	5	6
4	4	6	7	8
5	5	7	8	9
6	6	8	9	10
7	7	9	10	11

3. Sum the results of 1 and 2, and divide by the number of characters playing in the adventure. Round to the nearest whole number.
4. If you are running a table of six PCs, add one to that average.

By following these four steps, you will have determined the APL. Throughout this adventure, APLs categorize the level of challenge the PCs will face. APLs are given in even-numbered increments. If the APL of your group falls on an odd number, ask them before the adventure begins whether they would like to play a harder or easier adventure. Based on their choice, use either the higher or the lower adjacent APL.

APL also affects the amount of experience you may gain at the end of the adventure. If your character is three character levels or more either higher or lower than the APL this adventure is being played at, that character will receive only half of the experience points awarded for the adventure. This simulates the fact that either your character was not as challenged as normal, or relied on help by higher-level characters to reach the objectives.

Note: LIVING GREYHAWK adventures are designed for APL 2 and higher. Three or four, or sometimes even five 1st-level characters may find difficulty with the challenges in a LIVING GREYHAWK adventure. If your group is APL 1 there are three things that you can do to help even the score.

1. Attempt to create a table of six 1st-level characters, or try to enlist higher-level characters to play at that table.
2. Advise characters to buy riding dogs to help protect them, and fight for them. All riding dogs are considered trained to attack. PCs who want their dogs to attack must succeed at a Handle Animal or Charisma check (DC 10). Failure indicates that the animal will not attack that round. This is a free action (spoken command) that may be attempted each round. If an animal loses half or more hp in a single round it flees, unless another check is successful.

Time Units and Upkeep

This is a standard one-round Core adventure, set in the Iuz occupied lands. This event costs two Time Units to play. Adventurer's Standard Upkeep costs 12gp per Time Unit. Rich Upkeep costs 50gp per Time Unit. Luxury Upkeep costs 100gp per Time Unit.

Background

In 585 CY a group of adventurers from Greyhawk aided a powerful cleric of Pholtus, Pholemius Brightmantle, banish a powerful Tanar'ri called Xazivort within the Gnarley Forest. Pholemius himself was a Sin Eater from the Theocracy of the Pale – a sect that believe that by consuming victuals in front of dying believers will bring the soul of the departing closer towards perfection and approval of Pholtus. Pholemius was seeking Ragaer, a dying member of the Church Militant but what he found was Ragaer possessed by the fiend.

However, Xazivort was banished, and not destroyed. He left in his wake a minor cult that were in fact responsible for directing the fools who released Xazivort from imprisonment the first time, and they have spent the last eight years plotting his return in the hopes of earning boons he has falsely promised them.

Xazivort's age-long struggle with servants of Pholtus has led to him being obsessed with the four sins of the creed of Pholtus, cowardice, avarice, self-indulgence and self-will. The cult believe these are the key to Xazivort's release, and thus if these sins are committed on a large enough scale they will provide enough power for a ritual to summon Xazivort and he will once more walk the Oerth. Needless to say this must not be allowed to pass as it would be dire for the people of the Flanaess.

It has come to the attention of the cult that Greyhawk City's River Quarter has seen numerous clashes between the resident churches of Trithereon and Pholtus. Being highly chaotic and lawful respectively there have been verbal and even physical conflicts between the two religions. The Cult intends to play upon this and to this end two of their number have infiltrated both clergy.

They intend to orchestrate a series of events, each one representative of one of the Four Deadly Sins that will culminate in a lethal confrontation between elite followers of Trithereon, the Knights of the Chase, and the Pholtans.

The first, the act of Cowardice, shall bring the PCs into the adventure as a cleric of Pholtus, tortured and drugged, dies at the feet of the PCs.

For the second act, Avarice, the cult has worked out that there are templars acting as couriers from the Church of Pholtus carrying gems to the Pale to aid the war in Tenh. This fact is not known by most of the Lawful Good clerics of Pholtus, but these actions are sanctioned by Arkandy Benris the High Priest of Pholtus in Greyhawk, who is sympathetic to the Palish.

During the recent upheaval in Tenh, Arkandy ceased paying his secret tribute to the Church of the One True Path in Wintershiven, until the Council of Nine sent couriers to put pressure on Arkandy to resume sending gems.

If these facts came to light, it would be most embarrassing as the Lawful Good faction of the religion are often denounced as heretic by the Palish. According to Arkandy, the church moneys are being spent on "church upkeep" (though he has not lied – he simply did not explain he meant the upkeep of the Church of Wintershiven). The cult has decided to attack one of these couriers within the city and frame Trithereon-worshippers.

For the third, Self-Indulgence, they will sacrifice one of their own as he indulges in pleasure of the flesh at a local brothel. Mistaking this man for one of their own the local clerics of Trithereon will take to the streets for vengeance, but this murder will however, provide the PCs with the information they need to deal with the cult...

Not before the Fourth Act of Self-Will. With tensions running high on both sides, they intend to fuel both Pholtan and some Knights of the Chase (Templars of Trithereon) into an all-out confrontation on the streets of Greyhawk. They believe that the death and destruction of so many followers of good-aligned powers will be of such a scale to summon their master, Xazivort.

The PCs will however interrupt the ritual, but not be able to stop its completion. In the dramatic conclusion to this scenario they go toe-to-toe with Xazivort himself, a very real and evil Tanar'ri!

Note to the DM

Circle of Sin is designed to be a roleplay intensive scenario. Interplay and dialogue between NPCs should take precedence over combat and acquiring treasure.

This is primarily an investigative scenario though there is some combat. The scenario relies on the PCs to piece together what is going on. You should roleplay interacting with suspects and witnesses, though if you wish you could reduce the interaction to Gather Information rolls to save time but this would only dilute the experience.

There are contingency encounters if you need to help speed the PCs on their way into the plot. You certainly should not need to or expect to run every single encounter given in this scenario within four hours.

Encounter One: Cowardice

Blissfully unaware of what is about to befall them, the PCs are relaxing in the Green Dragon (R2 on the Living Greyhawk City Map). It is not uncommon to find adventuresome fellows in the River Quarter – and the delights of the quarter are easy upon one's coin pouch.

After allowing the PCs to speak and introduce each other briefly, read the following:-

As you continue what you are doing, something catches your eye. A wild-eyed, old man staggers towards you, bearing a strange mark of a claw upon his forehead.

He is dressed in what might have once been white robes, now caked in dirt and grime. As he reaches you, before you can speak he points to each of you, "You... you I have seen! Great Evil – beware the Four Sins of Pholtus lest they bring you low. Each of them seeks a stranglehold on your very soul... Repent and deny their embrace!"

It is only at this point you realize that the man is spitting blood as he speaks, "I have seen it... I have seen His eyes... He seeks the death... of one who shall be close to you..."

He looks into space, and his begins to tremble. He points with a shaking hand, but when you look there is nothing unusual. Finally, as more blood comes from his lips, he whimpers and howls before suddenly dropping to the floor and convulses for a few seconds and lies still...

This man was Suneris Moroth, a cleric of Pholtus who disappeared last month. He was taken by the cult and was forced to take mind-altering drugs to allow him to see visions of the future. He was subjected to a constant revelry of pure sin, with dark voices alternating between whispering and screaming of Xazivort's imminent return, all within his own mind. They were growing more vivid with each day. Both his mind and body have suffered, and he has now died of fright.

Furthermore, as a direct consequence of an ancient rune of a four-pronged claw tattooed on his forehead Suneris may not be resurrected, except by a wish or miracle spell.

Any PCs from either the Theocracy of the Pale region or who play clerics or paladins of Pholtus will understand the significance of the Four Sins of Pholtus Suneris mentioned. Other PCs must make a Knowledge (religion) check (DC 15) to understand what the Sins are. In either case eventuality give them Handout One.

Attempts to aid this man either mundanely or magically are fruitless. He dies within seconds of finishing his monologue even if the PCs try to heal him. If this encounter occurs in the inn, several patrons leave to fetch the watch and a cleric if the party does not have one.

Searching the body reveals nothing; he has naught except his once-ornamental robes and a holy symbol of Pholtus (the sun and moon) around his neck. The authorities will expect these to be returned to the temple.

Finally, the watch arrives, and assuming all the PCs have remained where they are, want to question the PCs. Other witnesses agree that the man seemed to choose them randomly out of the crowd, so the watch does not press too far, unless PCs have a previous record of being troublemakers in Greyhawk City.

Eventually someone sends for a representative of the Church of Pholtus when the dead man's holy symbol is found. The body is taken away for examination. Incidentally speak with dead spells are cast on Suneris in the Temple, but these do not work. Due to the intense damage to his mind Suneris cannot answer questions coherently and the divination on this troubled soul yields no concrete findings.

Encounter Two: The Sin Eater

Upon recovering from the shock of all these events, regardless of what the PCs are doing that evening a messenger from the Temple of Pholtus (location R8 on the Living Greyhawk City Map) seeks them out unerringly to deliver the message given in Handout Two. The messenger is quite insistent that each PC returns with him. Pholemius is a very important person, and when a Sin-Eater seeks you it is best you go straight to him.

When the PCs are ready to go read the following:

The Temple of Pholtus is easy to find – it stands as a beacon of light in the dreariness of the River Quarter. Glowing orbs of divine light and golden flames that gently lick at the sunset from braziers illuminate the building. Even the walls themselves have their own bright glow, no doubt caused by the prayers of the brethren.

The messenger leads you through several corridors that contain doors leading into spartan and monastical cells. Eventually you are brought into a meeting area where a tall !!

"I am Pholemius," he booms loudly, "and Pholtus has guided you to me, all the way from the Theocracy of the Pale - his sacred lands."

Pholemius can tell the PCs the following:

- He is a Sin-Eater of Pholtus. He won't elaborate on what that is unless the PCs have the brains to ask him.
- A Sin Eater is a cleric who travels to where there are dying servants of Pholtus. By eating and drinking in their presence he makes their life's shortcomings more tolerated by Pholtus through a symbolic ritual. PCs of the Pale or who worship Pholtus know this is an accepted death-rite of Pholtus.
- He was told by Pholtus to seek Suneris, a cleric within the Jewel of the Flanaess. Pholtus speaks to him and guides him to where he is needed. Unfortunately this time it seems he was too late.
- Pholemius asks the PCs of what transpired with Suneris. If mention of the Four Sins of Pholtus is made, Pholemius is quite interested, but makes no attempt to explain the Four Sins unless asked to. If Pholemius does explain the Four Sins, give the PCs Handout One if they don't already have it.
- Pholtus has obviously guided the PCs to him. He may seek their aid again in investigating Suneris's death, which the High Priest of Pholtus, Arkandy Benris has given him jurisdiction over. Something drove the dead priest Suneris quite mad. He asks where he can contact the PCs and tell them to remain vigilant.

Encounter Three: Avarice

As the party return from their audience with Pholemius, and pass through the River Quarter, they hear a moan from a side-alley. A man dressed in mail is being attacked by shadowy figures in the alley. They are dressed in blue robes, and wear their hoods over their faces. This being the River Quarter none of the locals out "see" anything. It is up to the PCs to intervene, if they wish.

ALL APLs

☛ Verstan, male human Rog 8: AC 28, hp 66.

Note: Verstan is not factored into the ELs, he is non-combatant and should not be killed or captured during this encounter. He intends to escape, and has no interest in attacking the PCs. Thus full statistics for this rogue are not provided to help the DM wing his escape.

Tactics

Round One: The four cultists, fanatics of the Cult of Xazivort, try to delay the PCs while their leader deals his victim a coup-de-grace. They should not go down this round, but continue to fight even if the PCs appear to be gaining the upper hand. You should ensure at least one enemy is left standing by the end of this round while Verstan, slits the throat of his victim, grabs a silken pouch and runs deeper into the alley, escaping out onto the main street.

To spot the pouch, in the heat of battle have the PCs make Spot checks at an easy (DC 5). This roll is deliberately easy but do not tell that!

Round Three: The remaining attackers attempt to withdraw though one or two of them (if more than two are still alive) will remain behind to delay the PCs.

Cultists

Searching these attackers reveals a holy symbol of Trithereon the Summoner (deliberately planted!) If any attackers are subdued and questioned they claim to be acting for the Glory of the Summoner, and refuse to talk. Unless specifically bound they kill themselves in any manner possible (falling on their captor's sword, stabbing themselves with a concealed dagger, hanging in a cell before being questioned etc.) before any divination spells can be cast to determine the truth.

However if suitable precautions are taken it is possible for at least one of the cultists to be taken prisoner for questioning.

The Victim

The body of the warrior is of Aulric, a warrior-cleric of Pholtus. Contained in his backpack are several weeks' rations implying a long journey and the robes of a gleaming cleric of Pholtus. Aulric was in fact a courier between the church in Greyhawk and the Theocracy of the Pale. He carried valuable gems to the Pale to aid them in their endeavours, such as when they resume the war in Tenh. These gems are now in the hands of his killer, the cultist and assassin Verstan.

Trouble with the Law

The Nightwatch is alerted and comes to the scene quickly. Being followers of St. Cuthbert, these fellows try to wash their hands of the affair as quickly as possible. The PCs will be picked up (whether they intervened or not) and taken to a City Watch station where they will be questioned again (albeit more thoroughly – they have been linked with the death of two clerics of Pholtus in one day) by a rather burly constable named Urich (human male War 7, AL LN, Sense Motive +9, Intimidate +5).

Despite the fact that there is evidence to the contrary, the watchmen present (not being in the best of moods at this time of day) are aggressive in their questioning. Smart-mouthed PCs are knocked around a little bit, but just when there seems to be talk of spending the rest of the night in the cells, another messenger arrives from the Temple of Pholtus. This time however it is Pholemius, who vouches for the PCs.

He produces the seal of the High Priest of Pholtus as assurance that he is genuine, and eventually gets the PCs released assuming they have not misbehaved too much. Outside the station he speaks once more.

"As I'm sure the worthy constable will have pointed out, the death of two clerics of my faith in your vicinity is no coincidence. Unlike the heathen constable though, I believe Pholtus is guiding you for the greater good. Whatever his plan is, it is mysterious indeed.

"The man who died was Aulric, a templar and courier for the church here. It seems once again I was too late to save his soul."

If told about or shown the Summoner symbols then Pholemius scowls:-

"The misguided heathens of Trithereon have long been a thorn in the side of the righteous in this city by all accounts. However misguided these fools are it is difficult to believe they would be so brazen about attacking those of the One True Path."

If he has been told about the Four Sins, and the missing pouch from the templar Pholemius mentions that he believes these killings may be following a pattern.

Pholemius should weave the following facts into any conversation he has with the PC:-

- He has learned that Suneris died of sheer terror, or fear. This was in many ways representative of the sin of Cowardice. (Remember Pholtus's clerics are very intolerant of shortcomings, the cowardice was in fact also on the part of those who did this to Suneris).
- The attack on Aulric was simply to steal a pouch? If it contained something valuable and was a simple theft then it was an act of Avarice.
- The next sin is Self-Indulgence. (This is a valuable clue – it can be used to work out the site of the next crime, an infamous brothel named the Silver Garter, F18 on the Living Greyhawk City map).
- Pholemius does NOT know that Aulric the Templar was carrying gems intended for the Pale war effort in Tenh. He is not interested in such temporal matters.

Given the involvement of the Church of the Summoner, Pholemius decides it would seem prudent that the PCs, as an independent party, investigate the crimes. The temple is willing to pay a reward if the killers can be found and what was stolen, returned. Pholemius does not "handle money" as it provides a distraction from the purity of his purpose. He can be contacted at the Temple of Pholtus. Pholemius then bids the PCs farewell, and walks off into the night, bound for the Temple of Pholtus

Encounter Four:

Investigating the Crimes

The PCs have numerous leads they could use to find the killer. Their goal here is to find out that the killer Verstan is in fact to be found in the Silver Garter – a brothel in the Foreign Quarter (location F18), and when they go there move on to Encounter Five: Self Indulgence.

Word on the Street

If asked about Suneris, and described in his ragged manner that the PCs saw him in, several persons say that they saw him all over town that day, ranting and talking to himself.

The Temple of Trithereon

Clerics at the Temple of Trithereon (location F19) are less than helpful. This is partly because they do not know anything of use, but also word has got around that the PCs were involved in fighting the thugs the previous night. The PCs speak with a cleric named Veris Tremmel, who is decidedly unhelpful, while protesting the innocence of his order. Unfortunately he knows little of use, and only continues to protest vehemently about the injustice of his church being a suspect in these murders.

The Temple of Pholtus

The Clerics at the Temple of Pholtus (location R8) try to be helpful. What the PCs learn about the two clerics depends on the time they are willing to commit here, and what questions they ask. Not everything listed here is relevant, but here is what is possible to learn:

The Reward

The Temple of Pholtus is willing to pay for the PCs to investigate Suneris and Aulric's death. They will offer to pay the PCs the following amount dependant on the APL of the table:

APL 2: Gold: 50 gp.

APL 4: Gold: 100 gp.

APL 6: Gold: 150 gp.

APL 8: Gold: 200 gp.

APL 10: Gold: 250 gp.

APL 12: Gold: 300 gp.

This is not negotiable, besides the temple is only hiring them because Pholemius recommended them.

If the PCs ask about the two deceased clerics they can learn the following:-

Suneris

- Suneris was a kindly old man. He was well liked among the Lawful Good faction of the Pholtan priesthood in Greyhawk. He was a scholarly-type and liked to read the books of Pholtus's Law. He would never have harmed anyone – he subscribed to the pacifist Pholtan doctrine.
- He went missing about a month ago when campaigning for converts and funds – part of the duties of the clerics is to go out into the street and beg passers-by to convert to the One True Path and receive donations.

- Suneris was no mad man. He was perhaps one of the most level-headed and devoted of the brethren. If any criticism could be made of him it was that he was not terribly ambitious – he was only a Glimmering Follower and entering into his old age! Then again he was originally a soldier before he converted to Pholtus and became a cleric.
- The cleric that examined him found traces of some sort of poison or hallucinogenic – though it was not this that killed him they say. The poor man died of a heart attack brought on by fear and nerves.

Aulric

- Not many folk knew Aulric, although the loss of such a devoted servant of Pholtus is felt by all. PCs are directed to clerics of a more Lawful Neutral tendency. These clerics are more “fire and brimstone” fellows – eager to convert the PCs by any means, and quick to chastise them if they reject the attempts. They are deliberately rude if they are speaking with non-Pholtus clerics by denouncing their faith as misguided heresy at every turn.
- The general consensus amongst these clerics is that Aulric was a very devout follower of Pholtus, more so than some of the brethren (a remark aimed at the more liberal Lawful Good clerics of Pholtus). Then again he was born and raised in the Theocracy of the Pale before coming to Greyhawk City.
- An acolyte on duty in the main chapel saw Aulric leave early on in the evening. He looked like he was leaving the city the way he was packed.
- One of the temple guards remarks that Aulric was called to see one of the High Priest's aides, Jorgas, before he left to meet his grisly fate. (This is when he was given the gems to take to the Pale).
- If confronted, the aide, Jorgas, says that he was merely speaking with Aulric who was going on a pilgrimage. He wanted to know if there was anything else the man needed. Alas it is too late for him.

Holy Symbol - One Previous Owner!

A peddler on Horseshoe Road is selling a holy symbol of Trithereon for a very reasonable cost. If intimidated/interrogated or beaten up sufficiently he says he found it outside Rotwater Way. It was just lying there in the filth on the road! In truth, Verstan discarded the symbol in his haste to visit the Silver Garter (F18), though the PCs won't be able to work this out immediately.

Who Would Do Such A Thing? Thieves MiLord!

The thieves' guild in Greyhawk knows much. They are an obvious contact. A rogue or bard could possibly use local contacts, friends of friends etc. to try and hear the word on the street about the dead clerics or any recent heists of note.

Depending on how long they take they can learn the following:-

- Not every footpad and murderer is in the Thieves' Guild you know!
- Dead clerics are bad for business. The Guild wants to know who did it as well – they run this city and like decent level of law and order as much as the Pholtines!
- There was a fellow in the Silver Garter who was boasting to several of the ladies of the night how he had been asked to steal something, but his employers had changed their mind and told him to keep the items as payment.

Spells

The PCs may have access to most of the divination-type spells listed here, they may try to persuade others to use them in their stead to further the investigation. If asked to cast spells for them Pholemius says he will not aid them through the casting of clerical magics but there are clerics in the Temple of Pholtus who are willing to cast one 1st-3rd level spells for the party (including healing spells should this become necessary). For higher-level spells PCs have to use their own influence with the temple, if they have any.

Locate object places the pouch in the Silver Garter (location F18 on the Living Greyhawk City Map). This enables the PCs to move on to the section Self-Indulgence. Speak with dead does not gain anything useful with regards contacting either cleric in this instance because Suneris's shade is quite mad, and Aulric did not see his attacker (and will not even in death reveal his mission to the Pale).

Still No Leads?

If it seems that after half an hour's play the PCs are still not getting anywhere play this encounter anywhere.

As evening falls and they have had no luck, a man dressed in white livery named Aeroth finds the party, whether they are walking through town, or staying in the inn. It is a messenger from the Temple of Pholtus with the following facts-

- A man was found dead in that den of evil the Silver Garter (an infamous brothel in the River Quarter). His robes - those of a cleric of the Summoner - were hidden in a pile in the corner.
- The body is still there if you go quickly.
- We don't know who was killed or how he was killed, it was enough that he was one of us and that he was killed! It was assassins working in the pay of the Church of Trithereon! They have to be behind this don't they? That's what Sacred Brother Kaeris said. (Kaeris being one of the cult, Thoxart, who was stirring trouble to increase tensions between the two religions).

Encounter Five: Self-Indulgence

Having tracked the killer to the Silver Garter (location F18 on the Living Greyhawk City Map), the PCs either arrive before or after the watch were alerted.

Just in the nick of time

If they have arrived without being prompted by the Trithereon rabble, read the following text to them:-

The scene at the Silver Garter is one of disarray. Several panicked looking courtesans are sat by the bar, being comforted by gentlemen customers. In the corridors there is a great deal of commotion, as men, some of them concealing their faces by hoods or masks, seem to be leaving en-masse.

As you begin to wonder, you are noticed and confronted by a woman whose size seems to dwarf most of you. Judging by the worn lines upon her face she is of at least two score summers and is well over six feet tall. Two folded arms of extraordinary length cover her stout barrelled chest, and she says in a deep and husky voice in accented common, "Dead customers! And now ruffians come wondering into my establishment bearing arms! This is a gentleman's club, and I doubt very much you are members! What do you want?"

This is Rhina (female ogre, Ftr 10, hp 83, Sense Motive +11), affectionately named the Ogress, the local owner of the establishment. Her people have just discovered that one of the clients has been stabbed as he lay awaiting a massage. Needless to say the client in question is Aulric's killer.

Rhina is not just going to let the PCs into the Silver Garter unless they can come up with a very convincing reason. Stating that they are working with the Temple of Pholtus is not going to cut it as the Temple has been trying to shut down the Silver Garter for years. What gets them in is stating the possibility that a killer is here, and justifying it (mentioning the holy symbol that was found near here, results of locate object spells when looking for the missing templar's pouch etc). PCs can also excuse themselves and then sneak in with a successful Hide check (DC of 10). They should be encouraged not to fight their way in here! Rhina is an influential woman in the River Quarter as its representative on the Public Council of Greyhawk.

Eventually the PCs are either able to find their way to the room, or be shown by Rhina herself, who will excuse herself to tend to her panicked employees.

The room itself is plushly decorated with silk curtains and intricately patterned walls. Two windows provide a view of the River Quarter and provide the only other light source than the single waxy candle. Ornate silk sheets hide the body of a man who is lying chest down with a knife plunged into his back.

Examining the scene can reveal the following:-

- A Search check (DC 15) finds a set of blue robes untidily rolled up in a sack in the corner of a room. (This is where Verstan placed them before he was murdered. Robes are harder to discard than a holy symbol).
- A Heal check (DC 20) can place the time of death as two hours before the PCs arrived.
- The bag of gems is hanging from his belt, and the Pholtans will want these returned discretely.
- Another Heal check (DC 17) reveals the knife was poisoned. While the knife wound was near the man's spine, it was the poison that finished him off.
- There is no sign of forced entry. The attacker did not exit via the windows, and the door was not locked. (In fact, the killer was Jandice who entered, posing as a courtesan and stabbed the unsuspecting Verstan).

Late for the murder

Of course if the PCs learned second hand of the murder, turning up to the Silver Garter still proves useful as they can question the courtesans if they can persuade Rhina to let them in. The City Watch though, has taken Verstan's body, and the scene of the crime has been thoroughly tampered with since then (opened windows, the door is locked, the knife and sheets taken away).

Asking questions

Whether or not the PCs were on time to investigate the scene of the crime questioning the courtesans of the Silver Garter eventually reveals the following:-

- The man was not a member of the club when he came last night. Worse yet he was somewhat drunk, but his gold was good enough for Rhina to grant him a provisional membership and companionship for the night.
- He signed his name as Verstan, but most folk around here generally use pseudonyms. This fellow was rather drunk though, so it might be his real name eh?
- The woman who was attending to the man, who gave his name as Verstan, was called Mellathe.
- Mellathe vigorously denies that she killed Verstan, as she was getting oils for his massage from the stores. A few of the other courtesans can corroborate her story if necessary (which is true!)
- There was a strange woman in the corridors. People figured she was a new arrival but now no one can find her now.

Speaking with the Dead

The watch eventually takes the body away (if they hadn't already done so by the time the PCs arrive).

If the PCs suggest that Speak with Dead is used, the watchmen are more than happy to turn the body over to the PCs and the Church of Pholtus for investigation. If they don't, Pholemius certainly thinks of doing so and sends a messenger to request the PCs presence. Pholemius thinks that perhaps the killer's tongue has been loosened in death since he himself has been murdered. This thinking is correct.

If it is Pholemius who suggests using Speak with Dead, the next part of the Encounter occurs in the Temple of Pholtus. Arkandy, Pholemius and Constable Ulrich are present – Ulrich acting as an impartial witness. If the PCs themselves have the idea and the means to cast the spell and do so without the Temple of Pholtus, then adjust the rest of the encounter accordingly.

The spell is cast and the dead man's body twitches where he lies. In a ragged and ghostly voice the corpse groans, "Ask your questions. I will answer what I wish."

Remember the PCs get one question per caster level. If they got a cleric to cast the spell at the Temple of Pholtus, Arkandy himself casts the spell, allowing the PCs to choose six questions. If they are unwise in their questioning, they shall be stuck!

When (or if) Xazivort's name is mentioned, and Pholemius is present, read the section labeled Pholemius's Illness. Otherwise, his illness occurs off-camera.

- Who are you? Verstan gives his name in life as "Verstan." (obviously).
- Who killed you? Verstan's corpse will twist and turn restlessly and he will speak of "that bitch Jandice".
- Who is Jandice? "A sister of mine in the Cult."
- Why did you rob and kill Aulric? "It was one of the Four Acts of Sins the Cult needed to summon Xazivort."
- What Cult? "The Cult of Xazivort."
- Who (or what) is Xazivort? "He who was bound and shall be set free. A Tanar'ri most powerful."
- Why did she kill you? "To take my place in the ritual to summon our master Xazivort."
- What/where is this ritual? "The ritual is to unbind the Tanar'ri Xazivort. That is why the Four Acts of Deadly Sin are taking place. Once they are complete the ritual shall take place in Mertwig's warehouse."
- What are the acts of Four Deadly Sins? "These are four acts that embody each of the deadly sins. For Cowardice we caused such fear in Suneris he died of it. For Avarice we stole the templar's gems. For self-indulgence it seems my whoring and subsequent death was the act."
- What is the last act? "I know not. These things were on a need to know basis."
- Where is the warehouse where the ritual is being done? Verstan gives directions to the warehouse within the River Quarter.
- Why are you being so cooperative? "I want revenge on the Cult and on Xazivort for abandoning me."

Pholemius's Illness

If Pholemius is present during the questioning Verstan, at the point when Xazivort's name is mentioned read the following:-

The corpse raggedly breathes, and its head spins to face Pholemius.

"You, Eater of the Sins, he who saw him bound once more, know that he seeks your death above all. Know even now he strikes at you..."

Pholemius moves to speak, but his eyes roll inwards, his face grows pale and sweat cultivates on his body as he collapses to the floor...

This should be a shock to the PCs as speak with dead is not supposed to do this!

Pholemius has fallen unconscious in an ensorcelled fever. No amount of magic can revive him – only the defeat of the Tanar'ri Xazivort. Clerics tend him, but to no avail unless the PCs succeed.

The clerics' prayers reveal that it is an extra-planar threat that threatens Pholemius – perhaps this Xazivort. No one at the temple knows anything of Xazivort.

Where to Now?

If the PCs questioned Verstan outside of the Temple of Pholtus and the incident of Pholemius's Illness does not occur, a messenger arrives from the Temple of Pholtus as soon as possible, requesting their presence. There they are asked to report on their findings to Arkandy Benris, and may learn of Pholemius's fever which has occurred as outlined above (but without the corpse speaking to Pholemius obviously!)

After the PCs go to the Temple of Pholtus their next destination should be Mertwig's warehouse in the River Quarter, though run Encounter Six as they leave the Temple.

Incidentally if the PCs request backup in the form of templars, clerics, watchmen etc. allow them reasonable resources, but ensure they are lost maintaining order or fighting in Encounter Six.

Troubleshooting Speak with Dead

It is entirely possible the PCs will either squander their questions to Verstan or simply have insufficient questions if they cast it themselves. In the event of doing so, the PCs may be unable to recast the spell for one week on Verstan, but they can arrange a raise dead from the Temple if necessary. The Pholtans will be unhappy about rewarding a heathen and a thief and murder, but will assent to do so either for 900 gp. If the PCs are unable to pay this they can forfeit payment and favour with the temple to gain the information outlined above. A further condition the Pholtans have is that Verstan is incarcerated in the Temple grounds until he can be tried for his part in all this.

Encounter Six: Self-Will

As the PCs prepare to leave the Temple, to go to the warehouse present the following:-

As you reach the steps of the temple the scent of burning metal assails your nostrils. Your eyes fall upon a red-hot iron brand heating in one of the temple braziers and you note a crowd gathering around the steps.

Tied to one of the many columns on the steps is a man dressed in the robes of the Summoner, and before him is a man dressed in plate decorated with the livery of the Church of Pholtus. Around him are gathered twelve more members of Pholtus's clergy, who watch the crowd impassively, their arms folded and their expressions grim. Swords are girthed at their hips.

Their leader reaches for the heated brand, "Aulric was a brother of mine in our church!" he says, pointing the glowing brand close to the subdued man's face. "I know that you and your accursed order had a hand in it! Tell me your part in it now! REPENT!"

The man, Luminem, is another carrier from the Pale, and as he said quite truthfully one of Aulric's brethren. Having just arrived at the temple in Greyhawk for his consignment of gems he was informed of Aulric's murder, and heard the prevailing theory that the Summoner's clergy were behind it. Incensed by this he wasted no time in finding the first poor Trithereonite (a man named Geric) in the city and questioning him in his unique way.

The characters have roughly half a minute to react to the situation and persuade Luminem to abandon his torturing of the Trithereonite. Summoning Arkandy works as a delaying tactic but Arkandy is unable to dissuade Luminem from this course of action. The delay is enough though to save Geric from the branding iron.

If they fail within half a minute, Luminem reaches with the brand and places it on the man's face. All falls silent, as there is an anguished scream, a loud hiss and the stench of burning flesh, much to the horror, and in the cases of the more unruly elements, encouragement of the crowd.

Irrespective of the results of this, after another half minute read the following: -

The edge of the crowd parts to reveal a man dressed in silvery chain mail and wearing a blue tabard emblazoned the Rune of Pursuit. Many other men of similar attire follow him.

This injustice has gone on long enough!" he yells, drawing his sword for emphasis. "You, sir," he points at Luminem, "are naught but a bigot and a torturer and will pay for what you are doing to Geric there."

He pats the hilt of his sword menacingly, "Come on lads! Let's show these scum our street justice!"

Some of the crowd continues to part as he and his men surge forward, their blades drawn, while others produce their own and attack, yelling the name of Pholtus.

A mass battle is about to ensue between Luminem's Pholtines and the Trithereonites, led by a Knight of the Chase named Kelmur Trantris. The zeal of each faction is so great the PCs face a -10 circumstance penalty to Diplomacy checks to dissuade either side from violence, while the Trithereonites and Pholtans receive a +10 circumstance bonus to any Will Saves against mind-affecting magics.

It is possible that the PCs may wish to dash to their destination, or try to stop the fighting. If they try to make for the warehouse, they spend five rounds in the battle trying to get out of it (all the while open to combat). Either way they have to deal with Trithereonites and Pholtines (depending on which religion they appear to follow) attacking them in the midst of the fighting. The DM is encouraged to use his own judgment in determining which opponents waylay the PCs (one on each pair of PCs would be logical). Note however that the PCs should not be placed in any real danger during this encounter (although they may certainly feel threatened). This encounter is designed to highlight the smouldering tensions between two diametrically opposed but general good faiths.

Opponents in the Battle

The PCs will be engaged by either Pholtan or Trithereon worshippers in this battle. Statistics for such "zealots" are provided, as are statistics for Luminem and Kelmur Trantris in the unlikely event the PCs attempt to intervene.

Roughly thirty combatants are involved on each side.

☛Luminem of Pholtus, Ftr2/Clr3: CR 5; Medium Humanoid; HD 2d10+2 plus 3d8+3; hp 29; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 16 (+5 chainmail, +1 buckler); Atks +4 melee (1d8 [19-20/x2], longsword); SQ Spontaneous casting (cure spells), +1 caster level to Law spells (Law Domain), greater turning once per day (Sun Domain); AL LN; SV Fort +6, Ref +1, Will +3; Str 12, Dex 11, Con 13, Int 11, Wis 15, Cha 12;

The combat ensues for ten rounds, before Arkandy and Jazinduur Euroz-Slayer restore order. It is a pitched, chaotic battle on the steps and street before the Temple of Pholtus. Roughly two men on each side go down per round, plus any that the PCs take down.

Without radical intervention on the part of the PCs (for which you must use your own judgment) the flow of the battle goes as follows: -

Round 1: The PCs are unengaged, The Trithereonites and Pholtines begin to fight each other in a chaotic mob. Only clerical vestments are used to distinguish between the sides.

Round 2: Arkandy and his assistants arrive on the steps of the temple if they had not been summoned already. He begins an impassioned plea to his brethren to stop this chaos. He is mostly ignored.

Round 4: The leader of the Trithereonites, Kelmur Trantris, faces Luminem in a one-on-one combat. They are able to shrug off any "peon" attackers.

Round 7: Despite suffering a grievous wound and needing to be taken to the Temple of the Summoner, he manages to cleave Luminem's head neatly off its shoulders.

Round 8: Jazinduur and a group of escorts arrive at the outskirts of the battle. One of her escorts rings the High Priestess's bell, which most of the Trithereonites recognize. They stop fighting and look around briefly. Jazinduur implores them to stop this madness, as she did not sanction the attack. A few zealots ignore the High Priestess. This also gives some Pholtines the chance to take stock of the situation and hear their own High Priest's orders.

Round 9-10: People on both sides start shouting for the fighting to stop. The Trithereonites sheepishly begin to carry their injured back to their temple, and the Pholtines do likewise. Some fighting still ensues, but is quickly suppressed. Jazinduur approaches Arkandy in the centre of the street and mutter some words to each other. Both High Priests depart, leaving their aides to handle the situation.

Out of the Pholtines ten are left lying on the ground injured and a further ten are dead. The Trithereonites suffer similar casualties. These are on top of any casualties the PCs inflict on either side.

The Aftermath of the Battle

If the PCs stick around after the battle, they might be curious as to who whipped Luminem into such a zealous frenzy, and who also tipped off Kelmur Trantris.

A Gather Information check (DC 18) reveals from the scene of the battle the name of Sacred Brother Kaeris (really called Thoxart, one of the Cult of Xazivort) who told Kelmur to watch the Temple of Pholtus for trouble.

Luminem and the other Pholtans were told by a cleric named Karyn that the Trithereonites had done it, and that there was proof. Karyn was of course Jandice, a cleric of Xazivort, but the Pholtans are blissfully unaware of this duplicity.

Encounter Seven: The Warehouse

The PCs should have no trouble in locating Mertwig's warehouse. Directions can be given if necessary, but there are no guards outside the warehouse, which is unusual in the River Quarter.

Inside

The reason for there being no guards outside is because an alarm spell has been cast on the door. Upon opening the door, the alarm goes off alerting the Cult's guard. What ensues should be a tense fight in confined quarters as the PCs and NPCs use the empty crates for cover and hiding, never quite sure of each others position.

Cunning PCs should be able to effectively use their Hide, Sneak and Climb skills around this area to aid their reconnaissance and to surprise the guards.

It is possible to reach the rafters of the warehouse by climbing the crates shown on the map by way of a Climb check (DC 10) or Jump check (DC 20). Indeed, the PCs need to do this to disarm the crate trap.

Tactics: The cult has significant funds and has been able to equip their guards with heavy crossbows, which they attempt to use to pin down the PCs. They also attempt to use the crates for half-cover.

They are reasonably competent soldiers, and should be deployed tactically to catch the PCs in the crossfire. Once the alarm has gone off, they spread out across the warehouse, hide within the crates and fight a fanatical delaying action, pinning the PCs down with their crossbow fire. They are anxious to prevent the PCs from reaching the door to the ritual.

APL 8 (EL 9)

☛ Succubis (Tanar'ri): hp 45, see Monster Manual, page 41.

☛ Jilia, female human Com1: AC 10, hp 1 (normally 4), AL N, Bluff +4.

Tactics: Igg'azza is a particularly strong and striking succubi who has served Xazivort well in the past, both as an assassin and as a consort. The demon has contacted his former associate and she has come from her home plane to answer him.

She additionally has a charmed courtesan from the village of Five Oaks, near her old hunting grounds in the Gnarley Forest, who is 'trapped' down the trapdoor. Jilia is Igg'azza's companion, hopelessly compelled to serve the demoness as a handmaiden and by acting as a second part of her ruse.

When the PCs appear Jilia appears to climb out of the trapdoor, dressed in rags and covered in claw and bite marks (all three gifts from Igg'azza). Jilia attempts to tell the PCs that she and her friend were taken as sacrifices for the room below. She cries and asks that the PCs help her and her companion (Bluff +4), who is finding it difficult to climb the ladder (see Trapdoor! below).

Jilia swoons in the arms of any male PC, and reward their chivalrousness with a kiss on the lips – a mundane one to disarm the PCs to the fact the Igg'azza, or Igana as Jilia will refer to her, is a succubis. After being helped up the ladder, the succubis attempts to charm any male PCs wearing her mask of gratitude and similar attire. She attempts to delay the PCs with idle chatter and failing that to reward her rescuers in a similar manner, but with the level draining effect of a succubus. She then attacks the PCs while Jilia remains non-combatant and screams that the PCs have driven Igana mad!

A clue to the fact all is not as it seems - Igg'azza got hungry awaiting her consort to turn up and decided to eat the cult's guards. Consequently she and Jilia drew guard duty – but both girls claim they heard a wild and feral beast slaughtering people above their cell. The succubus does not try to summon any extra-planar help at any time.

Tactics: These two arachnid demons were brought by the cult from the Gnarley Forest and one is poised over the entrance to the warehouse, the other over the entrance to the ritual room. They attempt to slow the PCs with poison, web and brute force for as long as possible.

APL 12 (EL 13)

Tactics: This Vrock Tanar'ri is Xazivort's intended general See'rach who observes the PCs while hidden in the rafters as they enter the warehouse. A successful Spot check (DC 29) reveals his presence. As soon as the PCs are well within the warehouse where he can reach them he attempts to use his darkness ability before swooping down on the terrified PCs and rending them with claws and other attacks at will.

Encounter Eight: The Ritual

This is it! The climax of the adventure, and what the PCs have been working for so far. By the time they have arrived the ritual is well underway to summon Xazivort. Once they have made it through the door on the map, present the following:-

The sound of chanting emanates from this dimly lit room. Candles arranged around the room in a circle provide the only illumination, and allow you to see the angry faces of the room's occupants.

Four of the people are stood at four points on the circle, one is a mailed warrior of medium build, another a plump halfling, the third is a strikingly beautiful woman of Olven descent and lastly a robed woman with scars across her face. She fingers a blood red round symbol menacingly. Seeing you though, she stops and points at you, "Look well on the Circle of Sin, for it shall be the last thing you see. Your deaths shall amplify our ritual and speed the coming of our master Xazivort!"

The others turn to face you, reaching for their weapons, but stand their ground and continue the chanting, "He who was bound shall be set free in sin!"

Specifics

In keeping with their theme of the Four Deadly Sins, each of the four participants on the circle represents one of the Deadly Sins.

The four “sins” have one final task to perform before completing the ritual, and each alternates each turn. They do succeed in summoning Xazivort, but if the PCs efforts in combating the cultists are successful they stand a better chance against the weakened Tanar’ri itself!

Representing Cowardice

Thoxart is a deserter from the Great Northern Crusade and an ex-Shield Lander. Despite this he is something of a competent warrior.

Using the identity of Sacred Brother Kaeris he was able to infiltrate the ranks of the Church of Trithereon and help increase tensions with the Pholtans of late. Indeed it was he who told Kelmur there “might” be an incident outside the Temple of Pholtus today.

Representing Avarice

Mertwig is a halfling merchant who lost all his funds in the Greyhawk Wars. Since taking up the placation of Xazivort in 586 CY his fortunes have reversed. He is obese for a halfling and perhaps the weak point in the circle.

Representing Self-Indulgence

A lesser-known half-elven courtesan from Greyhawk’s River Quarter, Lillyth is also a formidable spell-caster.

Representing Self-Will

Jandice, the mastermind of this piece is truly a rarity! Of all of the gathered people she is perhaps the only Cleric of Xazivort in Flanaess. However she is fortunately not a particularly powerful one, but under the name of Karyn she infiltrated the Church of Pholtus and increased tensions with the Trithereonites. She is quite proud of the fact that she was right under the Pholtines noses all the times and they didn’t know. She was also responsible for killing Verstan in the Silver Garter, as he was becoming a risk to her leadership of the cult.

She is quite simply insane. If the ritual succeeds she intends to offer herself as Xazivort’s high priest – little realizing Xazivort has other plans for her body! To this end she wields a wicked looking poisoned dagger.

Before You Begin The Combat

Each of the “Sin” NPCs has a specific task to achieve in the first four rounds of combat. If they do not, then Xazivort, when he manifests, is weaker. They cannot attack on rounds where they must complete their task.

Round One: Thoxart allows a white feather to flutter to the center of the circle.

Round Two: Mertwig throws some of his gold dust into the circle.

Round Three: Lillyth throws a miniature carving of a succubus into the center.

Round Four: Jandice throws a wooden (non-magical) symbol of discord into the circle.

The PCs can interfere in these actions (catch the symbols before they land in the circle, cut Mertwig’s pouch before Round Two, whatever they do). Indeed, their doing this is a good thing because the PCs performance in these four rounds of combat affects the difficulty of actually defeating Xazivort when he manifests himself.

The PCs actions affect Xazivort's hit points like this: -

Interfering in a Sin's Participation: -2 hp

Wounding Each of the Sins: -1 hp

or

Killing Each of the Sins: -4 hp

Killing the Host: -10 hp

Xazivort's Manifestation

When you believe the combat has gone on long enough (i.e. more than five rounds), read the following:-

Before you can act you are shocked and surprised when those candles in the circle that have not been extinguished in the fighting suddenly belch out a gust of flame almost two feet high! Just as quickly as this bizarre occurrence came it ends, as the candles extinguish leaving you in darkness.

After a mere heartbeat, the sound of evil menacing laughter permeates the air around you and you begin to feel very warm. The furniture in the room begins to move!

Suddenly, an eerie grey light fills the room. The scene before you is in disarray! The candles of the Circle of Sin have melted into a pool of molten wax, the tables and chairs spin with a will of their own and the participants of the ritual all lie slumped to the ground, all unmoving... except for the woman in the centre.

Her skin is now an unhealthy shade of gray, and sweat covers her body. Her face, looking at each of you, shows the feral grin of a madwoman as she convulses on the floor.

Attacking Jandice has no effect now other than proving somewhat messy (and she has been resurrected if she was somehow killed in combat). Xazivort possesses her, but she is not powerful enough to hold his essence.

Essence of Sin

Xazivort's essence is what lights the room. It takes the form as a ball of red light above Jandice's head.

At APLs 2-4 Xazivort's essence can be attacked by conventional weapons and spells, but for only half damage (although blows always hit). Magical weapons (such as those the cultists wielded) do maximum damage. Xazivort is too weak from his recent summoning to receive his standard immunities to non-magical weapons.

At APLs 6-8 Xazivort has damage reduction of 25/+1, and at APL 10-12 damage reduction of 25/+2.

Xazivort's essence may cast 1d2 spell effects per round. Choose these spells randomly; the creature cannot cast the same spell in any two adjacent rounds.

Conclusion

Victory

After being reduced to 0 hp the whole bizarre phenomenon ends – Xazivort has been banished once more, leaving the PCs and any Cultists who weren't killed. Jandice and her cultists are catatonic, and at the mercy of the PCs.

What ever the PCs do from here cannot change the fact they have succeeded in their mission. They have a lot of explaining to do. They have possibly only now hear the tale of the fight outside the Temple of Pholtus, and of Kelmur's victory over Luminem. You may wish to tell them this story to provide closure. However, to conclude the scenario present the following: -

After bearing the tale of your victory to the eager ears of the now-recovered Pholemius and the other Clerics of Pholtus the conversation turns to your reward. Arkandy agrees that you have truly earned your reward.

As you prepare to leave the temple, Pholemius and Arkandy both await you. Pholemius still shows signs of his illness as he leans heavily on his staff, but he is clearly glad to see you.

Arkandy produces several pouches and says, "The Church is pleased to give you all this gold." He hands you each a share of the reward and coughs, and produces a second set of pouches, "The Temple of the Summoner however, not to be outdone by us, has also agreed to match our reward, for clearing their name in this matter." He hands you the second set of pouches, which do indeed contain an equal amount of gold. Regaining his composure he smiles and leaves you and Pholemius, "May you continue to walk the One True Path."

Pholemius appears much more serious though, "Since my recovery I have been trying to divine Xazivort's fate, but my divinations have proven inconclusive as to whether or not you have actually banished him or he retreated to fight another day.

"I shall travel to the haven that is the Theocracy where those who know more of this Fiend shall aid me in my divinations. If my worse fears are met, we may meet again sooner than you think..."

With that he turns and leaves you to your grim thoughts...

Certainly, whether or not Xazivort merely retreated from the warehouse or not remains to be seen in future scenarios. Think of it this way though - in a city the size of Greyhawk there are ample people he could possess in order to make his escape!

Defeat

If the PCs were all slain or driven off by Xazivort or the cult's magic then there are no such questions about the fate of the Tanar'ri. He is most definitely free from his banishment, and ready to wreak havoc on the PCs, Pholemius and all who have opposed him in the past. Surviving PCs are commiserated with by the kinder Pholtans, but berated verbally by the conservative clerics who say they would have succeeded had they not been heathens.

Pholemius dies of his fever after three days, and thus ends this grim turn of events...

The End?

Treasure Summary

During an adventure, characters encounter treasure, usually finding it in the possession of their foes. Every encounter that features treasure has a "treasure" section within the encounter description, giving information about the loot, coins, and magic items that make up the encounter's treasure.

The loot total is the number of gold pieces each character gains if the foes are plundered of all their earthly Equipment. Looting the bodies takes at least 10 minutes per every 5 enemies, and if the characters cannot take the time to loot the bodies, they do not gain this gold. If you feel it is reasonable that characters can go back to loot the bodies, and those bodies are there (i.e., not carted off by dungeon scavengers, removed from the scene by the local watch, and so on), characters may return to retrieve loot. If the characters do not loot the body, the gold piece value for the loot is subtracted from the encounter totals given below.

The coin total is the number of gold pieces each character gains if they take the coin available. A normal adventuring party can usually gather this wealth in a round or so. If for some reason, they pass up this treasure, the coin total is subtracted from the encounter totals given below.

Next, the magic items are listed. Magic item treasure is the hardest to adjudicate, because they are varied and because characters may want to use them during the adventure. Many times characters must cast identify, analyze dweomer or similar spell to determine what the item does and how to activate it. Other times they may attempt to use the item blindly. If the magic item is consumable (a potion, scroll, magic bolts, etc.)

and the item is used before the end of the adventure, its total is subtracted from the adventure totals below.

Once you have subtracted the value for unclaimed treasure from each encounter add it up and that is the number of gold pieces a character's total and coin value increase at the end of the adventure. Write the total in the GP Gained field of the adventure certificate. Because this is a Regional scenario, characters may spend additional Time Units to practice professions or create items immediately after the adventure so this total may be modified by other circumstances.

L = Looted gear from enemy (calculated at 50% of book price); C = Coin, Gems, Jewelry, and other valuables (calculated at 100% of value); M = Magic Items (calculated at 75% of book price).

Handout One: The Seven Deadly Sins

From the Piesetical of Pholtus, as translated and transcribed from the original Old Oeridian into the Common Tongue by the Gleaming Follower Veldamonth of Ogburg in the Common Year 570.

Here Brethren are the Four Deadly Sins of the Creed of Pholtus, that you might know them and avoid their all-too tempting embrace.

Cowardice – One must have courage in the face of danger, and the strength to stand with valor against those who oppose the One True Path. To show a lack of courage in the face of adversity, to avoid exposing oneself to danger or pain when one is called to are considered a terrible sin.

Avarice – Worldly goods distract one from following the One True Path. They are but temporal, while the Path is spiritual. When death occurs, the spirit moves on, leaving possessions behind. Therefore wanton cupidity is Sin Eaters usually have little more than their robes, their holy symbol, their staff and accoutrements, as well as any equipment necessary for travel.

Self-Indulgence – The pleasures of the flesh are a distraction from the pursuit of perfection in Pholtus's image. Indulging desires without thought for others is a great sin. Gluttony, promiscuity and so forth are all considered negative concepts and a true follower of the Way is expected to never fall prey to their clutches.

Self-Will – To flaunt the will of others and carry out one's own desires is a sin. Pholtus is a highly lawful deity. He expects unity in his followers at all times, and brooks no bickering between followers when action is called for. A factioned group of followers is easily subverted by evil and chaos.

Handout Two:
The Summons

To whom it may concern,

I understand that you were present at the time when the life of the Glimmering Follower Suneris ended and that out of all those present he did single you out for his attentions.

I humbly ask that you travel to the Temple of Pholtus with this messenger, who is a man of irreproachable character. There I would have you find me, for I demand an audience to question you in the hopes of finding exactly what happened to one as righteous and virtuous as Suneris. In assisting in such an undertaking you would be doing the Church a great favor, and, if this is not enough to move you to action, it would also profit yourself by starting you on the One True Path to salvation.

*May His Radiance light thy Path to me,
Brightmantle*
